Farkle is an incredibly fun and addictive backgammon game that is equally suitable for fun family game nights or math classes (or any class for that matter). Already know how to play and want to jump right into free download? I was first introduced to this game after receiving it as a gift a few years ago. I remember playing with my sister immediately after receiving it and really enjoying it and being packed. The year of living alone meant sitting on a shelf and barely playing. Now that I have a husband in the photo, I decided it was time to surprise and teach him Parkle! Parkle's game is not very complicated. When you buy a copy, you may be shocked at how simple it is. The version I own also features a cup for rolling dice that doubles as a game save, six dice, and a set of rules in two different languages. If you have dice in your classroom, you don't even need to buy a game! In your turn, you will roll all six dice. All score dice are set aside. If you want to keep that score, you stop. If you try to increase the score, roll the dice back without scoring. When this repressed dice score is scored, this point is added to the total. If you don't get points with a newly dried dice, you'll have a bang and lose all accumulated points. The points earned in the previous round are safe. Here's a visual summary of how to score at Farkle. 3 types, 4 types, etc. must be credited to the single roll. You cannot earn these points by combining the results of multiple rolls. If you earn points from all 6 dice, you can also roll again. You must have a score of 500 points to ride on the board. And, the first player to reach 10,000 points wins. To read the full instructions, here's a link. If you arrive to do a lot of reading and research, you will soon find that there are many different versions of the game with different scoring rules. Sean and I found him playing Parkle, stopping the game to discuss and calculate different odds. For example, we often find ourselves in situations where there is one die left that we can roll. What are the odds of a parkling in which one dies? Well, one die, the only way to score is to roll 1 or 5. We have a 1/3 chance of 1 or 5 rolls, so we have 2/3 chance of farting. If you have two dice, it's a fart chance (2/3)^2. If there are 3 dice (2/3)^1 or 5, the probability of not rolling 3 is 3. Fart with 8/27 chance. Enough not to take risks? We ended up playing four different rounds in a day. Sean said the game reminded him to pass the pig his family is a little obsessed with. He said he actually prefers Parkle to pass pigs because the game involves a little more strategy. Of course, it still involves a lot of luck! After this day full of Farkle, I definitely decided to incorporate Farkle playback into our probability unit in a non-AP statistics course that I teach every other year. This year, I'm teaching Trig instead of statistics, but I decided to design a Farkle score sheet to use with my students. Here's what I came to think of: the score sheet has all of the points combinations at the bottom to keep students score easily. It also means that they can play by getting six dice in my backgammon tub. No rule sheet required! After designing this score sheet, I recently remembered that I had recently purchased an 11 x 17 dry erase pocket for my classroom where I had not yet had a chance to use anything. I have a set of 9 x 12 dry erase pockets that we use for so many different things. We're excited to do bigger, more reusable activities. I have a package of 11 x 17 white card stock that I use to make a lot of posters, and now I'm going to be able to use it to make jumbo-sized activities as well! So, I pho my 8.5 x 11 score sheet again to make an 11 x 17 score sheet. Here is my new Jumbo Dry Clear Bangpacle score sheet ready to go. I was so excited about them, I took a selfie with them in a post on Twitter! Of course, when the students saw that I had created this scorecard, they insisted that we try them out. Here are some action photos: The group used plastic cups instead of the Parkle cups that originally came with the game because other groups were using it. I love that you can play this game with students as long as you have access to backgammon! A few years ago, I asked my school to buy 500 dice in the classroom. They have come in handy so many times since then. I've posted an 8.5 x 11 and an 11 x 17 version of the Farkle score card I made here. Click on the photo on the Farkle score card to open and print the file. Two Farkle score sheets are printed on 8 1/2x 11 sheets. The Parkle scoresheet is used to play Parkle. Up to six players can score on each scoresheet, with the winning combination displayed at the bottom of the sheet. Players record bank points after each roll. The first person to reach 10,000 points wins the game! We have created our Farkle score sheet to use with our new Farkle Deluxe Dice game, but you can print the scorecard and use it with any Parkle game. It is a popular backgammon game of unknown origin. It can only be played with six dice sets and some paper for scoring. The rules are simple - they offer the perfect combination of luck, strategy and taking risks. The highest player with more than 10,000 points wins the final round! Each player takes turns rolling the dice. When it's your turn, roll 6 dice at the same time. Points are earned every time you roll three pairs of 1 or 5, 3 types, 6 dice straight (1,2,3,4,5,6) or two triplets. If none of the dice got a point, it's Parkle! Because you didn't earn points, you pass the dice to the next player. By rolling at least one scoring die, you can bank your points and pass the dice to the next player, or put some or all of the winning dies (dice) aside and roll the remaining dice to risk the points earned during this round. The rest of the dice can earn extra points, but if you're a parkel, you'll lose everything you earn during the round. The scoring machine is based solely on the dice on each roll. You can't combine dice on different rolls to earn points. You can keep the dice rolling until you have a pass or parkle. Then the player rolls six dice until the pass or parkle. Play continues until it rotates again. The final round begins as soon as all players reach 10,000 points or more.
